

FRENCH SOCIETIES DINE FOCH AS HE ENDS VISIT HERE

Marshal, Leaving for Washington, Declares He Has Real Friends in New York.

Marshal Foch and his party left at 12.15 A. M. to-day for Washington, the first stop on a tour that will bring them back to New York about Dec. 15. When the Marshal reached his car he shook hands with Inspector O'Brien of the Traffic Division, in charge of the police escort, and complimented the New York police on the way they had handled the crowds. He issued this statement:

"If any one had attempted to picture New York to me as it really is and what its citizens have done in the last two days, I would have found it impossible to believe it. In leaving New York I know I am leaving behind me thousands of friends who are real friends, and when I return, as I will in a few weeks, I will then know that I am among friends whom I shall ever cherish."

Last night hundreds of former French soldiers, many of whom were naturalized Americans but hurried back to France early in the war, paid homage to him in the Plaza Hotel, where the French societies gave a dinner for him.

Outside the hotel were more than 2,000 persons, most of whom were French. In the banquet hall stood several hundred members of the French societies, including former French officers. As the great leader of the Allies entered the room, they saluted him with the famous French salute. The Marshal responded with a similar one.

When the Marshal saw several bouquets seated at the tables he remarked that he was glad to live in peace among them instead of sending thousands to their deaths.

"We have the black page in French history wiped out and I can die happily, as Alsace-Lorraine has been redeemed," he said. The hundreds at the dinner gave him thunderous applause.

Albert Blum, President of the General Association of Alsace-Lorraine Societies in America, was toastmaster. Leon Rothier sang "The Marseillaise."

The Marshal began his third and last day in New York by attending a high mass in St. Patrick's Cathedral. William F. Deagan, State Commander of the American Legion, accompanied him from the home of De Lancy Kountze, his host.

In front of the church, backed on either side of Fifth Avenue, were more than 1,000 school children. Among the grown-ups waiting was "Babe" Ruth. He joined the Marshal's party when it arrived at the Cathedral. The Marshal was escorted into the sanctuary, where he sat during the service. His entourage occupied seats in the front rows. Archbishop Hayes celebrated the mass, assisted by Mgr. Joseph P. Dinneen.

Mgr. Michael J. Lavelle, rector of St. Patrick's, delivered the sermon. After a few brief remarks in English he welcomed Marshal Foch in French, and then translated his remarks into English. He spoke of the cordial relations that exist between the peoples of France and this country.

After mass Archbishop Hayes introduced "Babe" Ruth to the Marshal as a member of the Knights of Columbus. The Marshal presented to Ruth the first brick for the new $2,000,000 welfare headquarters for the New York Chapter, Knights of Columbus.

The Marshal received an illuminated spiritual bouquet, the gift of 100,000 children of the parochial schools in New York. The children of Europe gave him a similar one. From the Cathedral the Marshal went to Fordham University and received his sixteenth degree as doctor of laws since he arrived in America, Oct. 28. The 69th Regiment, N. Y. G., acted as escort. After receiving the degree the Marshal presented two war medals to two men of the 69th—to Sgt. Richard O'Neill the Congressional Medal of Honor, and to Sgt. Edward J. Ganey the Distinguished Service Cross.

Leaving Fordham the Marshal was driven to Poe Park, the Bronx, where he placed a wreath on the column erected in memory of men of that section who died in the war. He then called at the Convent of the Sacred Heart at 126th Street and met several sisters. He then went back to the home of Mr. Kountze.

After resting a few hours the Marshal then went to the Army and Navy Club in West 59th Street, where he was greeted by high officers of the army and navy. Thence he went to the Plaza and later to the Hippodrome.

At the reception in the Hippodrome, under the auspices of the American Legion, the Marshal got a tremendous ovation from 6,000 men and women, waving American and French flags. He spoke briefly, praising the Legion and its purposes. Hanford MacNider, National Commander of the Legion, and Martin W. Littleton also spoke. Ogden L. Mills presided.
